THE SAME GAME IN A NEW PLACE

When our family moved to a flat without a garden, my younger brother missed the outdoor games we used to play. At first, we tried to copy them in the living room, but the noise disturbed the neighbours. Our grandfather suggested changing the rules instead of giving up. We made a quieter table version of one game using cards and small counters. On weekends, we still went to the park for active games. The new version did not replace everything we had enjoyed before, but it gave us another way to spend time together. We learned that a family tradition could continue even when its setting changed.

16. What changed after the move?
    A) The family no longer had a garden.
    B) The family stopped seeing the grandfather.
    C) The children had to change schools abroad.
17. Why were the first indoor games unsuitable?
    A) They required too many cards.
    B) They disturbed the neighbours.
    C) Nobody remembered the rules.
18. What did the grandfather suggest?
    A) Adapting the rules to the new setting
    B) Giving up all games
    C) Moving every game to a neighbour's flat
19. What did the family still do at weekends?
    A) Stayed indoors without activities
    B) Bought a new table every week
    C) Played active games in the park
20. What does the text suggest about traditions?
    A) They can exist only in one particular house.
    B) They must always follow exactly the same rules.
    C) They can continue through thoughtful changes.
