A Result Worth Reporting

At an interschool race, a runner named Sarp noticed that another competitor had taken a wrong turn. Sarp called to him and pointed towards the marked route. He lost a few seconds and finished fourth. After the race, a reporter asked why he had helped. Sarp said that winning mattered to him, but a result should depend on fair competition. His coach said she was proud of his decision. The school newspaper reported both the winner's performance and Sarp's action, giving readers a fuller picture of the event.

16. Why did Sarp call to another runner?
    A) The runner had taken a wrong turn.
    B) The runner had already won.
    C) The runner had asked for a drink.

17. What was the effect on Sarp's race?
    A) He lost a few seconds and finished fourth.
    B) He was disqualified for cheating.
    C) He finished first without slowing down.

18. What did Sarp say mattered alongside winning?
    A) Fair competition
    B) Getting every newspaper photograph
    C) Avoiding all difficult races

19. How did his coach react?
    A) She asked him to stop training.
    B) She was proud of his decision.
    C) She refused to discuss the race.

20. What made the newspaper report more complete?
    A) It mentioned only the weather.
    B) It omitted the race result entirely.
    C) It covered both the winner and Sarp's action.
