Advice or an Audience

Whenever Ekin described a difficulty, her friend Rüya immediately suggested solutions. Rüya believed she was being helpful, but Ekin sometimes stopped talking before she had explained the situation. One afternoon, Ekin said that she occasionally needed someone to listen rather than make a plan. Rüya was surprised, then asked whether Ekin wanted advice or simply time to talk. Their conversations became less frustrating. Ekin still asked for suggestions when she needed them. Rüya learned that offering support involved understanding the other person's needs, not always producing the quickest answer.

16. Why did Rüya offer immediate solutions?
    A) She thought this was helpful.
    B) She wanted to end the friendship.
    C) Ekin always requested a written plan.

17. Why did Ekin sometimes stop talking?
    A) She had already solved every difficulty.
    B) She had not had enough opportunity to explain.
    C) She disliked all forms of advice.

18. What did Ekin explain?
    A) Friends should never suggest solutions.
    B) Her difficulties were all imaginary.
    C) Sometimes she needed a listener.

19. What changed in Rüya's approach?
    A) She refused to discuss difficulties.
    B) She asked what kind of support Ekin wanted.
    C) She started giving advice more quickly.

20. What is the main lesson of the text?
    A) Support should respond to the person's needs.
    B) The best friend always has an immediate answer.
    C) Disagreement should end every conversation.
