Beyond an Open Invitation

A youth centre advertised a free film discussion and invited everyone in the neighbourhood. Few people attended. Instead of deciding that residents were uninterested, the organisers asked for feedback. Some people could not read the small print on the notices. Others needed captions or could not attend at the advertised time. The next event used clearer notices, captions and a different schedule. Attendance increased, but the organisers continued collecting suggestions. They realised that an open invitation was only a starting point: people also needed practical opportunities to take part.

16. Why did the organisers seek feedback?
    A) To understand the low attendance
    B) To prove residents disliked films
    C) To choose a higher entrance fee

19. Why did they continue collecting suggestions?
    A) They planned to cancel all future events.
    B) Increased attendance made feedback unnecessary.
    C) Participation could still be improved.

20. What does the text emphasise?
    A) Inviting everyone does not automatically remove barriers.
    B) Free events never need planning.
    C) Low attendance always shows lack of interest.
