A Fair Division of Work

Four students volunteered to prepare a display for a school celebration. At first, one student took responsibility for nearly everything because she wanted the display to be perfect. The others became unsure how to help. Their teacher suggested listing the tasks and agreeing who would do each one. The group also set a time to check progress together. The finished display contained different styles, but everyone could explain their contribution. They agreed that sharing responsibility had improved both the work and the atmosphere, even though it required more discussion at the beginning.

16. Why were some members unsure how to help?
    A) The display had already been removed.
    B) Nobody knew the celebration date.
    C) One student was doing nearly everything.

17. What did the teacher suggest?
    A) Agreeing on tasks and responsibilities
    B) Asking one student to work alone
    C) Choosing only one style before talking

18. Why did the group arrange a progress check?
    A) To cancel the display
    B) To keep the other members uninformed
    C) To review their work together

19. What could everyone explain at the end?
    A) Their own contribution
    B) The teacher's private timetable
    C) Why no discussion had occurred

20. What did the group learn?
    A) Sharing responsibility can improve work and relationships.
    B) A good project must use only one person's ideas.
    C) Discussion should always be avoided.
