Recognising More Than Winners

A school used to display only the names of competition winners. This year, the student council suggested recognising other contributions too. The new display included careful research, helpful feedback and improvements made after an unsuccessful attempt. Some students worried that the prizes would become less meaningful. The council explained that the winners would still receive their awards; the extra information would show the learning behind the results. After the event, several pupils said they now understood how much preparation a successful project involved. The school plans to ask for feedback again before repeating the arrangement.

16. What had the school displayed previously?
    A) Only competition winners' names
    B) Every draft of every project
    C) The names of all visitors
17. What did the council propose recognising?
    A) Only the fastest entries
    B) Different contributions to learning
    C) Only projects that won no prizes
18. What concern did some students express?
    A) Prizes might seem less meaningful.
    B) There would be no exhibition space.
    C) The council had cancelled the competition.
19. How did the council answer the concern?
    A) All prizes would be removed.
    B) Winners would still receive awards.
    C) Only council members could win.
20. What did some pupils understand better afterwards?
    A) The price of every competition prize
    B) The preparation behind successful work
    C) Why feedback should never be collected
