Read the text and answer questions 16 to 20.

A Recipe with a Story

For an online cultural project, students collected recipes from willing relatives and neighbours. They soon discovered that people used different ingredients for dishes with the same name. Rather than select one version as the only correct one, they recorded the reasons for the differences: available ingredients, family preferences and memories of earlier homes. By the exhibition, the group will have prepared a small digital collection with each contributor's permission. They plan to include short personal stories beside the recipes so visitors understand that a dish can carry different meanings for different people.

16. What did students discover?
    A) A dish's name did not always imply identical ingredients.
    B) Every contributor used exactly the same recipe.
    C) Nobody was willing to share any information.

17. How did they respond to differences?
    A) They removed all recipes with differences.
    B) They asked contributors to forget their preferences.
    C) They recorded explanations instead of choosing one universal version.

18. What will be ready by the exhibition?
    A) A digital collection
    B) A new commercial restaurant
    C) A documentary about every world cuisine

19. Whose permission is mentioned?
    A) Only the visitors'  B) The contributors'  C) Only the students' cousins'

20. Why include personal stories?
    A) To prove that one recipe describes everyone
    B) To replace the recipes with unrelated information
    C) To show different meanings associated with food
