THE EXHIBIT WE ALMOST CANCELLED

Our class planned a small exhibition about journeys made by local families. We had collected photographs and written descriptions, but two days before opening, the projector stopped working. Some students wanted to cancel because the digital display had been the centre of our plan. Others suggested printing selected photographs and using written labels. We divided the tasks, borrowed display boards and checked every caption with the families who had shared their stories. The final exhibition was simpler than we had imagined. However, visitors spent longer discussing the photographs because they were not waiting for slides to change. We did not conclude that projectors were useless. Instead, we realised that the purpose of the exhibition mattered more than the particular tool we had chosen.

16. Why did some students initially want to cancel?
    A) The families withdrew all their photographs.
    B) A key piece of equipment stopped working.
    C) The exhibition room was too small.
17. How did the class respond to the problem?
    A) They removed every written explanation.
    B) They asked visitors to supply new photographs.
    C) They changed the way the material was presented.
18. Why were captions checked with the families?
    A) To decide which family had travelled farthest
    B) To make sure the descriptions represented their stories accurately
    C) To persuade everyone to buy a projector
19. What unexpected benefit did the simpler exhibition have?
    A) The class no longer needed to prepare any material.
    B) Every visitor agreed that technology was harmful.
    C) Visitors spent more time discussing the photographs.
20. What is the main lesson of the text?
    A) Digital displays should always be avoided.
    B) A successful project never needs changes.
    C) A tool should serve the purpose of an activity.
