Different Plans at One Table

At a family dinner, three cousins discussed their plans. One hoped to study engineering, another wanted to train as a chef, and the third had not decided. An uncle began comparing the choices as if only one could be successful. Their grandmother suggested asking each cousin what attracted them to a particular path. The conversation changed from ranking careers to discussing interests, training and practical questions. The undecided cousin said she appreciated being able to explore options without pretending to have a final answer. The family agreed to share useful information rather than choose for one another.

16. What caused the initial tension?
    A) The uncle ranked the cousins' choices.
    B) All three wanted the same course.
    C) Nobody was allowed to speak at dinner.
17. What did the grandmother suggest?
    A) Asking about each person's interests
    B) Choosing the highest-paid job for everyone
    C) Ending all discussion of the future
18. How did the conversation change?
    A) It focused on interests and practical questions.
    B) It became a competition for one scholarship.
    C) It ignored training entirely.
19. What did the undecided cousin appreciate?
    A) Being forced to give a final answer
    B) Having a career selected for her
    C) Having room to explore options
20. What did the family agree to do?
    A) Avoid every future conversation
    B) Share information without making others' decisions
    C) Send identical applications for all cousins
