One Visit Is Not the Whole Story

After a short exchange trip, a student wrote that everyone in the host town followed the same daily routine. Her partner questioned the statement and described neighbours with very different habits. The student reviewed her notes and realised that she had spent most of her time with one family. She revised her report to distinguish what she had personally observed from what she could not know. The final version included the host family's experiences without presenting them as universal. Her teacher praised the clearer use of evidence and the willingness to reconsider an initial impression.

16. Why was the original statement questioned?
    A) It contained no description of any visit.
    B) It generalised from limited experience.
    C) It compared two train timetables incorrectly.

17. What had limited the student's observations?
    A) She had interviewed every resident.
    B) She had lived in the town for decades.
    C) She had mainly stayed with one family.

18. What did she change in her report?
    A) She removed all reference to the host family.
    B) She separated observations from unsupported generalisations.
    C) She claimed her partner represented everyone.

19. Why did the teacher praise the revision?
    A) It made stronger claims without evidence.
    B) It avoided describing any experience.
    C) It used evidence more carefully.

20. What is the main lesson?
    A) A single experience does not represent an entire community.
    B) Personal observations are always worthless.
    C) All visitors see exactly the same things.
